A planned consultation by the Department of Justice has been referred to the Law Reform Commission, after concerns were raised over the current wording in section 83 of the Criminal Justice Act 1988. The law says a person is guilty of an offence if they are “concerned in the commission or attempted commission of an offence and does an act with intent to facilitate the commission or attempted commission of the offence”. READ MORE: All you need to know about the UK’s new knife laws Barry Long of the Criminal Justice Alliance, which supports a reduction in the number of offences, said: “At first reading this clause criminalises people for actions not criminal in themselves and people who don’t intend to commit an offence. “Even someone who is driving a car intending to drop a small passenger off at a bus stop is committed to an offence by virtue of section 83. “This clause is potentially a wide scale criminalisation of bystanders, passers-by, people who try to help – basically anyone who is not caught red-handed.” But Peter Allen of the Crown Prosecution Service said
