Determination of pyruvate and lactate in biological samples by microdialysis and gas chromatography. A technique is described for the quantitative determination of lactate and pyruvate in animal tissues and fluids by microdialysis and gas chromatography. Lactate is produced by the lactate dehydrogenase reaction and is analyzed by gas chromatography. Pyruvate is analyzed by gas chromatography after a microdialysis procedure, in which the pyruvate is converted to lactate by lactate dehydrogenase. The linearity of the assays was established using aqueous solutions of known concentrations and the limits of detection for lactate and pyruvate were determined to be 10.4 microM and 4.5 microM respectively. The recovery of lactate and pyruvate from rat brain was 95.8 +/- 2.2 and 89.3 +/- 2.9 percent respectively. The technique was applied to the determination of lactate and pyruvate in rat striatal tissue following an administration of the epileptogenic agent kainic acid.
