founded in 1995 by Kevin Rudd, a former trade unionist, community activist, and then-newly elected opposition member of Parliament. The party contested the 1999 and 2001 elections, gaining and of votes respectively. The party was described as a "Rudd-inspired enterprise" by Rudd in 2003. The party has continued to take some votes to the right of the major parties, but had not attracted much support since the opposition's defeat at the 2007 election. There was some hope that the re-election of Kim Beazley as leader of the ALP in 2007 would lead to a recovery of support for the CAD, especially in the country seats where the party could act as a swing vote against the government. Following the poor result at the July 2007 election, and the retirement of Kevin Rudd from politics, Kevin Donnelly stepped up as party leader for the 2010 election.
